

Dung Doan

2/25/2021

Job Interest

A job that piqued my interests was being a data scientist. The reason behind it is because throughout my college career in the CS field, I find that collecting/managing data is most intriguing.

Qualifications

I don't believe I have much qualifications for this job in terms of all the knowledge required for me to even be considered to be hired but I believe that it will be a fun experience for me to meet the qualifications. For example I would have to learn the ins and outs of SQL and Python which is knowledge that I can take with me for future jobs if I were to be fired from this one. I strongly believe that when it comes to handling large scale data and managing it I am naturally good at it from my past experience so I think I would have an edge in this job. On top of that although my oral communication skills and group working skills are not refined I believe I can handle it and can only get better at it with experience. I am very tolerant and love to ask questions and learn more. On top of that I am very loyal and not too much of a fan of change so I won't hop from job to job that easily. With that said however even if I'm not a fan of change I am very easily adaptable to the work given and can pick up things rather swiftly with proper guidance. I am very passive so I would never start tension in the workplace although I could be too passive to a fault and never speak up for myself. My work performance can easily be affected by confidence which is a double edge sword and I have been trying to work on the repercussion when it's not in my favor. When I am confident in myself in something I can perform my tasks to beyond perfection. With that said when I lose confidence in myself it can go downhill pretty fast. I am always willing to learn and ask questions but can get pretty demoralized when given harsh but constructive criticism and it is no one's fault but my own. I've always been afraid to tackle new things because I am afraid to make mistakes but that is also going to change. Overall, the qualifications that I don't meet involve learning new languages. That is something I will tackle with my own hardwork on top of seeking professional assistance whenever necessary.

Additionally I'll make sure if I were to be hired that everyday at work I am progressing myself while doing my job. Afterall a teacher can learn more about the topic/subject they are teaching so I believe if I consciously pay attention to my mistakes at work and grow upon it, I can improve myself on the daily and prove to be a useful asset for my company. As for my emotional issues there has been and will still be a lot of self reflecting on the daily. But as I spend more years in the work force and meet more people I feel I will be able to change for the better. Even now I have some friends in their 30s telling me about their problems when they were my age. I feel extremely trapped most of the time and when I seek advice from them they all tell me the same thing, they all say they felt exactly how I felt when they were my age. So I will still be proactive about changing myself for the better but I won't beat myself up too much over it and let time run it's course.